Rev. Carlisle P. B. Martin, L. L. D. Of Waverly, Texas, writes: "Of a morning, when first arising, I often find a troublesome collection of phlegm which produces a cough and is very hard to dislodge; but a small quantity of Ballard's Horehound Syrup will at once dislodge it, and the trouble is over. I know of no medicine that is equal to it, and it is so pleasant to take. I can most cordially recommend it to all persons needing a medicine for throat or lung trouble." Sold by Hart's drug stores.

A Jamaican Lady Speaks Highly of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Mrs. Michael Hart, wife of the superintendent of Cat Service at Kingston Jamaica, West Indies Islands, says that she has for some years used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for coughs, croup and whooping cough and has found it very beneficial. She has implicit confidence in it and would not be without a bottle of it in her home. Sold by Frank Hart, and leading druggists.

MOVING A CONDOR.

When Zoological Park Birds Go Into Winter Quarters.

The Andean condor in the flying cage at the Bronx Zoological park, New York, turned his scrawny head to one side and squinted down at the ground beneath him over his broad white ruff. Evidently something was happening on the ground that was unusual. The stumpy pelicans were shoving themselves off for a heavy winged fight with an expedition that indicated that they were in a perturbed state of mind. Five men had just entered the cage. They had nets with them. Evidently something of importance was about to be done.

The men distributed themselves about the cage, some in the middle and some at the ends. For a couple of hours the scene reminded one of a chicken roost which has suddenly been disturbed. For all their appearance of wisdom the birds soon displayed the fact that they were easily "rattled." They figuratively, as well as literally, "flew all to pieces." The birds, tired out, one after another, were captured and carried out to a smaller enclosure in a closed building. The condor improved the saying of the Spanish sage regarding the catching of old birds with chaff. He left his perch and descended to get a better view of the trouble. Finding himself too near for comfort, he flew back again. Then he lost his head with the others and, flapping hither and thither in his ungainly fashion, soon found himself upon the ground again. One of the men grabbed him by the head. Another threw a pair of arms around his body and held his wings closely. Not without a physical protest did the condor succumb to the inevitable. He tried to spread his wings. He tried to wrench his head away. The men from previous experience knew what to expect should be succeed in doing either. On one occasion the condor had bitten the forearm of one of the men, cutting through three thicknesses of cloth with the facility of a razor. They did not care to furnish bones from their persons for his loathsome birdship.

Moving a condor, or any of the other birds, for that matter, from the outdoor flying cage to the warmer winter quarters, and vice versa, is a job requiring care. The condor must not be squeezed too hard, for that would injure him. He must not have too much freedom for the play of his wings, for "better one byrde in hand than ten in the wood."

"You must keep your head level when carrying a condor," remarked one of the keepers. "You can't let yourself get nervous when you feel his wings pushing out under your arms. If he should get his wings loose, why, you might see him climbing the sky. And if you press them too tight you may not only hurt him, but in your excitement forget about his head. If his head gets loose, why, you have a fight on your hands, so there you are."

While there are many tropical animals at the Zoological park and in Central park which must be housed through the winter, yet with the modern equipments of the two menageries the animals do not have to be moved when the season changes. They are simply shut inside or outside of their winter shelter, as the case may be. New York Tribune.

Spoiled Her Beauty.

Harriet Howard, of New York, at one time had her beauty spoiled with skin trouble. She writes: "I had Salt Rheum or Eczema for years, but nothing would cure it, until I used Bucklen's Arnica Salve." A quick and sure healer for cuts, burns and sores. 25c at Chas. Rogers, drug store.
